Abstract

This study investigates the influence of three cognitive and attitudinal factors on gender differences in green purchase behaviour. Using a large sample size (n = 1093), a survey has been developed and administered across Egypt. The findings from the multivariate analysis of variance (MANOVA) confirm the influence of consumers' ecological knowledge, concern and attitude on gender differences in green purchase behaviour. Consistent with previous studies, this study found that women appeared to be less aware of environmental issues compared with men. However, contrary to other studies conducted in the West, men showed more environmental concern and more positive outlook towards green purchase compared with women. The study discusses how the present findings may help policy makers and marketers alike to fine-tune their environmental and marketing programmes.

Introduction

Green consumerism is described as being a multifaceted concept, which includes preservation of the environment, minimization of pollution, responsible use of non-renewable resources and animal welfare and species preservation (McEachern and McClean, 2002). Green or environmentally friendly products are broadly defined as products that will not pollute the earth or deplete natural resources, and can be recycled or conserved (Shamdasani et al., 1993). Some examples of these products are household items manufactured with post-consumer plastics or paper, recyclable or reusable packaging, energy-efficient light bulbs and detergents containing ingredients that are biodegradable, non-polluting and free of synthetic dyes or perfumes.

Evidence suggests that a growing number of consumers in the US and Western Europe are becoming more environmentally responsible in terms of their personal habits and lifestyles (Stone et al., 1995). In a worldwide study, Sturch (1996) identified the total number of green consumers as being 15%. In the UK 10% are recognized as being hardcore green consumers (Carlo, 1999). Many US polls since the 1990s indicate that the percentage of consumers with a strong degree of environmental awareness ranges from 37% to 96% (Erickson and Kramer-Leblanc, 1991). Recent polls also report that 50% of Americans claim to look for environmental labels and to switch brands based on environmental friendliness (Phillips, 1999). In a study of Australian consumers, Suchard and Polonsky (1991) found that 61.5% of the respondents would pay more for environmentally safe products while 22.2%

into many marketing activities, including product and package design (Bhat, 1993; Polonsky et al., 1997) and pricing (Kapellianis and Strachan, 1996). Marketers have even gone as far as to develop specific models for the development of green advertising and green marketing strategy (McDaniel and Rylander, 1993; Menon and Menon, 1997). Nowadays, environmental consciousness is not only an ideology of activists, but also a matter of 'market competition' (McCloskey and Maddock, 1994), which influences consumer behaviour (Follows and Jobber, 1999). D'Souza (2004) claims that the green vision is a reality and needs to be more functionally understood to allow marketers to develop strategies aimed to meet the green consumers' needs. Compared with what has been happening in the West, consumers in Egypt, as well as in the wider context of the Arab world, are just at the stage of green awakening. For example, Egypt has passed recently a sweeping, 103-article law intended to clean up Egypt's air, land and water, as well as to protect the Mediterranean and Red Sea coasts. It also affords greater protection for wildlife (Napoli, 1994). This may explain the fact that little is understood about consumers' green purchase behaviour in this part of the Abstract: This study investigates the influence of three cognitive and attitudinal factors on gender differences in green purchase behaviour. Using a large sample size (n = 1093), a survey has been developed and administered across Egypt. The findings from the multivariate analysis of variance (MANOVA) confirm the influence of consumers' ecological knowledge, concern and attitude on gender differences in green purchase behaviour. Consistent with previous studies, this study found that women appeared to be less aware of environmental issues compared with men. However, contrary to other studies conducted in the West, men showed more environmental concern and more positive outlook towards green purchase compared with women. The study discusses how the present findings may help policy makers and marketers alike to fine-tune their environmental and marketing programmes. [ABSTRACT FROM AUTHOR]

Home

In keeping with the hallmarks of Munro's fiction, "Home" catalogues a woman's visit to her childhood home somewhere in the Canadian countryside. Still affected by her mother's death and processing a recent separation from her husband, the narrator's visit becomes serious as her father's health declines and he is forced to enter the hospital. Though little happens on the surface of the story, "Home" is a tightly-constructed internal narrative, a series of snapshots that attempt to capture the narrator's unique frame of mind as she moves through several uncertain and tense days, steeped both in memory and uncertainty. Published in 2006, "Home" is a sterling example of Munro's commitment to well-crafted and understated short stories and demonstrates the subtle skill of 2013's Nobel Laureate in Literature.

Alice Munro

Literary Reference Center salutes Canadian Alice Munro, winner of the 2013 Nobel Prize in Literature! Only the second Canadian to be so honored (the first, Saul Bellow, was a naturalized American citizen), Munro was described by the Swedish Academy as a "master of the contemporary short story"—a title readers around the world would heartily support. Noted for her stories of middle-class Canadian women and families, Munro most often wrote about the small towns of southwest Ontario, where she spent the major portion of her life. Her intense, probing short stories (which, along with one novel, constitute the entirety of her corpus) are credited with reviving critical and popular interest in the previously lagging genre, and her precise use of language, image, and detail have established her as the foremost writer of short fiction today.

Abstract

Purpose – Investors and financial statement users may have differing beliefs about the responsibility of an independent accounting firm performing an audit of a client's financial statements. This study aims to investigate the existence of an audit expectation gap between auditors and financial statement users in Egypt.

Design/methodology/approach – The research method adopted in this study is identical to that used by Schelluch, Best et al. and Fadzly and Ahmed.

Findings – The results found evidence of a wide audit expectation gap in Egypt in the areas of auditor responsibilities for fraud prevention, maintenance of accounting records, and auditor

Abstract (summary)

The fertility trends of women from 3 standards of living strata in Egypt were studied. Fertility in Egypt has shown a rapid decline since the 1980s, but this decline appears to be stalling in the late 1990s. Data from the 1988, 1992, 1995, and 2000 Egypt Demographic and Health Surveys indicate that the reproductive behavior of women from high- and middle-standard households is largely responsible for stalling of the decline during recent years. Once the gap between the different standards of living closes, the prospects for a lower fertility in the future is limited; therefore, the time of achieving replacement fertility in Egypt with the next 15 to 20 years is in doubt. If current trends in both the actual and the desired fertility of the middle and high standards continue. [PUBLICATION ABSTRACT]
